

Gloria wants computerized barangay polls

PRESIDENT BACALANGA ARROYO wants the forthcoming barangay elections to be computerized, more than a month before the national polls take place with the accompanying national elections on 10-12-25.

The President made the call recently to help the national government to help the provinces push for the modernization of elections.

"Let us use our right of technology to modernize the Philippines to make the life of our citizens a better one with more economic opportunities, greater social justice and better future for our children," Arroyo said in a speech she delivered during the 5th anniversary celebration of Women's Suffrage at the Philippine International Convention Center in Pasay City.

In her speech, President Arroyo urged women to exercise their right to vote and said that they could exercise this right "in the future," by exercising her civic responsibilities.

"Our administration has long provided funds for computerization of elections," Arroyo said. "Let's campaign for modernization of voting, counting and canvassing starting with the coming barangay elections."

She also asked for the people to unite on this issue. "We do disagree on political goals but not on the conduct of democratic elections."

She urged women to lobby for a law to fund poll modernization and a stronger law against election-related violence.

"To be able to lobby for all of these, we must see organizations like the women's organizations represented here, in this place, women to organize at the provincial level, with training on leadership, communication, negotiation, advocacy," she President said. (Dina I. Alonzo)

TRO issued against GMO rice product

THE QUEZON CITY REGIONAL TRO Court has issued a temporary restraining order on the application of Bayer Philippines Inc. to sue its genetically modified rice (GMR) for food, animal feed and processing.

According to the order in part, Bayer, Germany, claims that the GMR "has not been thoroughly tested as to its real impact on health and environment."

The TRO prohibits the Department of Agriculture and the use of Bayer's biotech from approving the application for 2003 Liberty Link Rice 615.

Environmental filed the petition last Aug. 22, questioning the lack of public notice and public consultation in GMO approvals by the DA and RPL, particularly at the case of Bayer's 12021 application.

The group further contends that "the approval process for GMOs to be used in human consumption, including Article 8, sections 13 and 17 and Article 18, sec. 7 of the 1987 Constitution (right to health, right to a sound ecology, and right to information on matters of public concern, respectively)."

In a statement, Greenpeace Southeast Asia Executive Director

ing Campaigner David Gonzalez said that the petition "is a case of Bayer's 12021 rice (right to health, right to a sound ecology, and right to information on matters of public concern, respectively)."

Villar dares GMA to walk the talk on ZTE deal

By G.C. Cabanajon Jr.

PREMIER MANOYALALAY has been instructed to launch the ZTE-World Network deal with ZTE Corp. Senate President Manuel Villar yesterday challenged him to walk the talk.

"A lot of people are involved in this country, but I am not saying who. It is important that the government establish that it is really open competition by considering deals such as this," Villar said in an interview with ABS-CBN.

"If the administration is really sincere and has no hidden agenda, let's see if they can walk the talk," Villar said.

Villar recalled that the controversial deal with Philippine International Air Terminal Co. Inc. (PIATCO) to build and operate the Manila Airport International Airport Terminal 3 was voided by the Supreme Court because of corruption and violation of the anti-bribery law.

"In the case of PIATCO, the President said it was important to fight corruption, while some who did not open [TSA 3], he now it's different... The ZTE deal is so much of a burden for our people. All our people have heard that [manoyal] is a deal, but it is not."

needed, and all the experts say it is a trap," he said.

Bad precedent

Villar accused that upholding the MNA deal could set a bad precedent.

"What if the President gives [manoyal] deal without by committee, and the government has to issue it because it upholds its commitment? Others will be encouraged to do the same because we are in a getting period. It is a difficult thing when someone gets pushed, he will do it."

He added that the deal should be subject to a public hearing, and the government should be open to the public. He said that the deal is not a simple one, and it should be subject to a public hearing.

Senate hearing

Sen. Alan Baguio, chairman of the committee on administration of public offices and government, said the Senate would hold its first hearing on the MNA deal on Tuesday, with Committee on Elections and Senate Relations and Sen. Jose Almonte II as the main opponents.

Sen. Franklin Linares said the deal should be subject to a public hearing.

VILLAR

Having a "bad" precedent with the MNA deal is a trap, Villar said. He said the deal is not a simple one, and it should be subject to a public hearing.

Monetary Board

Sen. Benigno Aquino Jr. said the Monetary Board should be open to the public. He said that the deal is not a simple one, and it should be subject to a public hearing.

President Manoyal dares address members of 70th anniversary of Women's Suffrage Philippines on the Philippine International Convention Center today.

Investigating the contract, lawmakers should look into the accuracy of history and how the deal was made.

But Sen. Manuel Del Rosario said the deal is not a simple one, and it should be subject to a public hearing.

It is not just the money, but the proper agency should be involved in the deal because this is not a treaty to the world. It is, in fact, a monetary transaction, which, under the Constitution, needs the approval of the Monetary Board," she said.

Joma on Dutch jail: I felt like living in a toilet

Netherlands, commented the attorney he is charged with, in deliberate and clear cooperation with the perpetrators in the Philippines."

The court decision does not preclude him from being prosecuted on murder charges. The court only rules on the request to keep someone in custody, while it is the public prosecutor's office that decides on whether to prosecute.

"My cell was 3.5 meters long by 2.5 meters wide. It was 2.5 meters high. It was cramped. I felt like living in a toilet," Joma told Manila reporters in a phone-patch interview.

Reminiscent of martial law

He said the military authorities were broken only by five hours of uninterrupted every day.

"During my confinement, I remembered those five years that I was placed in military confinement under military custody [during martial law]," he said.

The phone-patch interview with Joma took place at the Hague (Dutch) Headquarters (Hague) Headquarters in Quezon City.

Joma was accused of ordering the killings of Benito Kintanar in January 2000 and Arroyo Tabora, along with his son-in-law Stephen Ong, in September 2004 in Quezon City.

He said there were "trumped-up charges."

With his release, Joma said he gained "more confidence" in the Dutch legal system.

"I have the opportunity to prove my innocence and contribute to society from this place. I feel somehow vindicated in choosing the Netherlands as my place of refuge from persecution in the Philippines," he said.

Kintanar's widow

Joma said he was released because the prosecution failed to provide "strong evidence" linking him to the killings and said he was confident the case against him would be thrown out by the court.

He also said he would file countercharges against the Dutch authorities over his illegal arrest over his son-in-law's case.

Joma has protested against his detention on the human rights of the United States and some European countries.

Kintanar's widow, Jay, accused of ordered by the church-society action.

"I understand the justice will not be done," she said in a text message. "The case against Joma continues and I can wait for the verdict no matter how long and hard it takes. The rule of law, truth and justice must prevail over the rest."

Not yet off the hook

Wim de Bruijn, spokesperson for the national prosecutor's office in the Netherlands, said he was not yet off the hook.

The Dutch said the decision of the court simply means that there was no reason to further keep Joma in custody.

"For the prosecutor's office, the investigation will continue. Joma is still a suspect," de Bruijn said.

But for now, "he is free to go wherever he wants to go," he said. A Dutch court official who spoke on the telephone on the phone on condition of anonymity said the "in camera" decision merely focused on the question of whether there was sufficient evidence to keep the case in court beyond 14 days.

Respected legal system

"In essence, merely rules if it's right to keep someone in detention without looking at the evidence," the official said.

Asked for comment on the Dutch court's decision, US Ambassador to the Philippines Anne Kenna said: "The Dutch have a very well respected legal judicial system and it cooperates as well with Philippine authorities. I think we'll let them sort out what this means and what next steps to take."

Talking to ABC news on the local security adviser Marko de Groot said: "What's happening in the Netherlands is... purely a Dutch initiative."

"It's too early for us to make a judgment as to what is happening there because the process is continuing," Groot said.

The military said it would continue to strengthen its case that Joma had ordered the killings of his son-in-law.

Joma's release "does not remove the fact that the prominent leadership knew something about their ongoing operations," said Lt. Col. Marianne Beatty, second deputy spokesperson.

The chief of the Philippine National Police's Directorate for Operations, Director Wilfredo Garcia, said they were saddened by the release of Joma. "But we respect the decision of

Slain marine honored in Tacloban

By Winston S. Llanos
 Tacloban City

IT WAS VERY HARD FOR 54-year-old Tereso Semenario Jr. to accept that he would never see his first-born again. But the thought that his son had died while in the service of his country has somehow eased the pain in his heart.

"It is very hard for a parent to lose a child but what can we do? He died on duty, he was in bad luck for the family to lose on," said Tereso at the bedside of the casketing program of the casket presentation with celebration recently held at the Tacloban City Hall.

Tereso, a native of Tacloban, was to receive that day a certificate of recognition awarded posthumously to his son, Private First Class Elmer Semenario, a Marine who died last July in Basilan.

The award, given by the Department of the Interior and Local Government, was in recognition of Elmer's "selfless commitment to his duty and love of his country."

Elmer was one of the Marines belonging to the 1st Scout Company, 1st Marine Brigade of the Philippine Marine Corps, who were on their way back to their base after a 60-day search for abducted Filipino people in Basilan when they died on duty in Basilan.

After more than seven hours of flight, 14 Marines were killed with 300 items, including equipment, among them, Elmer.

Tereso said he learned from some of the survivors that his son's right arm and a leg were cut off by their enemy.

Elmer was about 22 years old when he was recruited into the Marine Corps. He had been in the service for about four years when he was killed in Basilan.

His remains were brought to their hometown in Samar, Tacloban, where they were interred by the Marine Corps. They were accompanied by Elmer's girlfriend, a 20-year-old student of Zamboanga City and his mother and grandmother. Tereso and Elmer were supposed to get married this month.

Also a marine
 Tereso knew how it was to be a marine, having joined the military service in 1970 at the age of 22. He was among the 10,000 recruits from Tacloban who trained in the U.S., Texas, for about six months of rigid training for exposure to his unit, the 1st Scout Company, which he had been assigned to for training in 1970.

He had been assigned to different places in Mindanao, among them Zamboanga and Jolo. In most of those years, he was with Elmer, Jr., and there were some more with him, who were his friends.

"My children grew up in military camps. When I was assigned in Zamboanga they were there and they were the same as the Marine," he says with a smile of a Marine.

Tereso said.

He wanted Elmer's second son, Alvin, to be a Marine like his father.

After he was assigned in Jolo with the 1st Scout Company, he was recently sent to Basilan.

TERESO Semenario Jr. holds the certificate of recognition given by DILG to his son, Elmer who died in Basilan last July 8.

Asked if his third son would also become a Marine, Tereso said his youngest son is also inclined to becoming a Marine. "But I won't let him be a soldier."

The youngest son, he said, is taking up mechanical engineering in a university in Tacloban.

Bringing flavors to a soundless world

By Ma. Shona Llanos
 Cebu City

IF HE CANNOT FULLY COMMUNICATE with signs, gestures and sounds, he might as well convey the words and meanings through flavor and aroma.

With that, Angel Llaguna, 26 and deaf, decided to make his mark by founding the New Visayas State University (NVSU) southern education club with 30 other members.

While he shares some place of his deafness, he realized because they were to work abroad and open a catering or restaurant business, he might get lost and lost, so he had to learn to be a chef.

"I wish to open a business, a restaurant for deaf people," he says in a sign of his deafness.

Angel said some of his deaf friends would want to join him as a restaurant or cafe, probably the first to be run by the deaf who want to go to business, beyond the catering and food service.

A high school graduate of the Special Education Integrated School for Deaf Children (SPED-IC), Angel would have wanted to go to college and become a chef, but he was not accepted.

He decided to go to work in a hotel in Cebu and learn to cook. He was in a sign language school where he learned to sign.

Neither could he afford to take an interview to work in a hotel.

He decided to work in a hotel, Angel said. He was active in the deaf community and he was a member of the deaf community.

Angel said he was happy in the working class run by deaf people. He was a member of the deaf community and he was a member of the deaf community.

For example, he has been involved in building a restaurant, making signs and getting to meet them. That means Angel will make the most.

According to Llaguna, Angel is deaf and blind. He makes other in communication with hearing people and does not feel inferior to them. He also makes full use of his mobile phone by sending text messages when land phones are hard to reach.

Angel's parents died when he was 12 and he was left to the care of his older siblings. Today he works for a sign language center at the NVSU, teaching people with hearing problems and making sandwiches and hamburgers. He also runs PISO every time he teaches sign language to the deaf and blind.

52,000 ha of bamboo plantations neglected

CLARK, PAMPUNOY. BAMBOO plantations in the country, estimated to be at 52,000 hectares in 1990, are "almost all neglected and not" indicating the commitment for economic development in rural areas and efforts to ease global warming, an official of the Philippine Bamboo Foundation Inc. said.

According to the Asia, president of the FBFI, said the bamboo stands have been neglected because many people perceived them as "only for the poor."

Law regard

"Any sign in bamboo plantations (bamboo) are seen with very low regard. Hence, no proper of bamboo stands of bamboo are thought to be considered by law people," he said in an interview following a briefing for Philippine private sector leaders at the Nippon Property in Tokyo, Japan, last Thursday.

In contrast, China has nurtured five million hectares of bamboo and is adding another million hectares in 2008 to sustain a $2-billion annual export industry that produces food, medicine, beverages, dyes, textiles, furniture, handicrafts, charcoal, paper and bamboo products. In the Philippines, the top bamboo products are dyes and some parts of furniture and construction, the official said.

Vanishing forest

At the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry's attention on alternative energy, said the world standard for forest cover was 62 percent and the Philippine was only below 25 percent. "We consider bamboo industry and bamboo are best for this," Mangin said, adding that bamboo have proven to be an efficient carbon dioxide sink. Bamboo grows so maturely in just five to seven years and grows well in marginal climate.

China exposure

Undersecretary Ricardo Munda, who is president of the Southern Taping and who is set to return to the Laguna Lake Development Authority's general manager in October, said he has taken up the bamboo development program as his "personal advocacy to provide additional income to farmers."

He began, he said, when First Development from Rigid Forest, said May 10 on exposure trip in April, China, during the side-light of the Southern Asia Games in 2005.

Munda said the program, which they started in early 2006, is private sector led, mainly the Bureau of Agriculture and does not get any funding from the government. The FBFI, POC and Munda have partnered in the program. They proposed to develop a five-hectare "bamboozation" as a sustainable living bamboo as a technology demonstration center at the Nippon Property in Tokyo, Japan, and in Pampanga, south of Clark.

Ideal site

At the Nippon Property in Tokyo, Japan, the FBFI plans to plant 20 species of bamboo from the University of the Philippines in Los Baños, Laguna, and 27 species from local provinces. Danilo Perera, managing director of the Singapore firm, said Munda was "extremely focused and accessible in other Central Asian provinces."

The Clark Development Corp. has now set officially approved to have the bamboo zone, has the funding, general manager of the local Nippon Property owner is as an addition to the attraction in the overall Nippon Property. Atrocious natural park.

Like Asia said bamboo growing on give more income to farmers. These who cultivate bamboo can earn P57,205 per hectare every year grow bamboo, say in Quezon, get returns of only P5,000 to P20,000 per hectare, he said.

Munda said the program has set up a nursery and propagation center in Quezon, according to him, the provincial government of Benguet has agreed to establish one at the Benguet State University for a reforestation program.

In Pampanga, Munda said bamboo could be utilized for erosion-control along overbanks. The Kapampangan Marang, comprised of former electric substation of Cebu, Inc. (Cebu), and continuing the good governance good citizen ship credo, has agreed to sponsor bamboo propagation training to the province's rural sector. Manila Office, Department of Agriculture

More E. Visayas kids suffering from malnutrition

By Joy A. Solano

Insider Visayas

CELESTINATION CITY. THE REGION of Southern Visayas (SWV) in Eastern Visayas reported a double-digit malnutrition rate among children in five of the six provinces in the region.

SWV regional chief Carlos Saavedra said Eastern Visayas registered an average of 30.44 percent in malnutrition prevalence rate in 2006, which was mainly blamed on poverty.

This problem, he said, was aggravated by the lack of interest among local officials in knowledge in malnutrition campaigns.

No interest

Further south, one of the province's poorest provinces registered the highest rate at 27.52 percent, followed by Samar at 27.16 percent, Misamis Occidental at 26.44 percent, and South Iloilo at 25.92 percent and 20.25 percent, respectively. Sulu's highest registered a malnutrition rate of 19.42 percent, Southern Leyte had the lowest rate of 9.49 percent.

"If the family is poor, natural food is insufficient. It can't support them in 100 percent and sometimes leads to their illness. Also, the big size of the family is another reason why we have problem on malnutrition," Saavedra said.

He said the lack of knowledge among mothers on the importance of eating nutritious food was another reason there was high malnutrition in the region. "This lack of knowledge is needed to ensure when our information dissemination can reach out reach," he said.

Based on the Department of Health conducted by the SWV, a last year, 40,423 of the 50,519 children (80.03) five years old that were weighed were considered malnourished.

The situation could be improved, said Saavedra.

"This is a considerable need a top-down call. We can change all this. But we need the support and support from our local leaders down to the barangay level. That is why when we conduct our malnutrition campaigns, we reached out to our people in the barangay," he said.

Lack of awareness

Saavedra noted that the lack of awareness and interest among local leaders in dealing with nutrition issues partly contributed to the situation.

"There is an apparent lack of appreciation among our leaders on the nutrition program, which is sad. A healthy population could provide lots of opportunities for development of the area," he said.

He said local leaders should implement a campaign on nutrition education and provide livelihood among communities, like gardening, as a means of addressing the problem.

Saavedra said SWV has decided to hold an orientation next month among the region's 138 city and town mayors, particularly the newly elected ones, to make them appreciate the importance of having a healthy population.

He said mayors would learn from Manila City, Southern Leyte, as it is one of the regions where the local government units had addressed malnutrition.

Experts warn of 'big one' after Sumatra quakes

BEJAM, INDONESIA—A series of powerful earthquakes has triggered tsunamis in several locations—including another one that triggered a flash tsunami sweeping Friday—leaving thousands sleeping on beaches in the hills and each new aftershock triggering a fresh round of panic.

Geologists fear the next may yet be worse.

Kerry Matthews, the California Institute of Technology, has spent decades studying the seismic belt here. He is one of several experts predicting a repeat of the massive earthquake that triggered the 2004 Asian tsunami, which killed more than 230,000 people in a dozen Indian Ocean nations.

"We are not sure whether it will be in 30 seconds or 30 years," he said. "But what happened the other day, I think is quite possibly a sequence of smaller earthquakes building up to the bigger one."

An 6.4-magnitude quake that struck southwest Java on Friday was followed by dozens of strong aftershocks—including one measuring a magnitude of 7.8 and another 7.1—that killed 22 people, damaged hundreds of houses and spawned a three-meter-high tsunami.

On Friday, a 6.4-magnitude tremor hit the area again, triggering the latest in a series of tsunami warnings that was later lifted.

The wall of water that crashed into several fishing villages on the island of Sumatra on Wednesday swept away nearly a dozen houses and caused 30th other damage. No one died.

Still, Bejams, a 62-year-old fisherman, said residents in Munas, Sumatra, were huddled when they saw the ocean retreat and then race back to shore.

"I heard people screaming and yelling, 'Tsunami! tsunami!'" he said. "I was to bed my children, but they had already gone to the hills."

A 60-year-old woman, Nisah, 60, recalls when the earth started moving beneath her.

"I was having difficulty breathing or walking," said Nisah, who like many Indonesians uses only one name. "I was afraid. My son grabbed hold of me and carried me out of the house."

The three massive quakes have also heightened experts' concern.

The last, which rans the length of the west coast of Sumatra about 200 km offshore, is the meeting point of the Sumatran and Pacific tectonic plates, which have been pushing against each other for millions of years. The one seen here seems to build up.

"There is a strong indication the Indonesian big one," said Dennis Hillman, an earth quake specialist at the Indonesian Institute of Science. "We all agree there is an 8.5 or stronger earthquake waiting to happen." AP

US program on climate is flawed, panel finds

AN EFFORT BY THE U.S. NATIONAL ACADEMIES TO IMPROVE FEDERAL CLIMATE RESEARCH HAS UNCOVERED SOME QUESTIONS BUT LACKS A LOT OF IMPACTS OF CHANGING CLIMATE AND INFORMING THEM AS THEY WOULD BE MOST AFFECTED, A PANEL OF EXPERTS HAS FOUND.

The Climate Change Science Program, created in 2002 by President Bush to improve climate research across 13 government agencies has also been hampered by governmental policies that have grounded earth-observing satellites and derailed programs to monitor environmental conditions on earth, concluded the report, issued by the National Academies, the nation's preeminent scientific advisory group.

Groundwater contamination, the panel's chair, said the program's basic scientific efforts had uncovered "an important question that has broadened our knowledge of climate change."

Among other things, the report noted, the effort has helped resolve disputes over whether the earth's atmosphere is warming significantly or not, allowing scientists to compare data and agree that warming is occurring.

But the report cited more problems than successes in the government's research program. Of the $1.7 billion spent by the program on climate research each year, only about $21 million to $30 million has gone to studies of how climate change will affect human affairs, he said. "We are, the report said, "disastrously slow and underfunded in the climate system are proceeding well, but one of the knowledge to support decision-making and to manage risks and opportunities of climate change is proceeding slowly," concluded the 15-member panel, made up of scientists from universities and two companies, BP and the domestic manufacturer DuPont.

John D. Marburger III, the White House science adviser, issued a statement Thursday thanking the science academy for the "thoughtful review," and saying that several issues highlighted in the report "are already being addressed."

The program was originally formed by Bush as a way to focus research on pressing issues and produce a broad range of results in one to five years. AP

Hurricane surprises Texas-Louisiana border

HOUSTON—GUST-FORGING Hurricane Humberto surprised the Texas-Louisiana border area on Thursday with a powerful punch that killed at least one person, shut down stores in Texas and cut power to more than 100,000 customers.

It had been expected to hit land as a tropical storm, but suddenly strengthened into a 137 mph hurricane before coming ashore in a transformation forecasters said was the latest on record.

"No tropical cyclone in the historical record has ever reached this intensity at faster than our landfall. It would be nice to know whether this is the 'big one,'" said meteorologist Patrick Bland at the National Weather Service office in Houston.

"It went from 30 knots (56 km/h) to 75 knots (138 km/h) in 24 hours. That's never happened before," said meteorologist Patrick Bland at the National Weather Service office in Houston.

Waters in the upper Texas coast about 60 km west of Galveston in the early morning hours on a Category 3 hurricane on the Gulf of Mexico coast, then weakened to a tropical storm by 11 a.m. and later a tropical depression.

The storm was blamed for the death of an 80-year-old man in Bridge City between Houston and New Orleans, who was killed when his patio canopy fell on him as he sought shelter from the storm.

By 3:30 p.m., Houston said the storm winds had fallen to 50 mph as it moved toward Louisiana. It was headed toward, dropping some up to 10 in as it went. Officials said a number of highways in Louisiana were flooded.

Part of Humberto's impact area will be recovering from Hurricane Rita, which hit the Texas-Louisiana border in 2005, drove weeks after Hurricane Rita devastated New Orleans.

Total Petrochemicals USA, Baker Energy Corp. and Marine Energy LLC, collective in Port Arthur were also down by power outage.

In the peak, power was out to 134,000 customers in Texas and Louisiana, reported the area's main utility, Energy Corp.

The company said it could take several days to restore electricity. Reuters

A La Salle pull the Eagles down is a difficult task—there is a lot of work, the Green Archers, a

Build-and-sell worthwhile risk, former OFW says

By Tina R. Saez

RYVALDO FLORES, 46, and Zenaida Pajardo-Flores, 48, never thought they would someday build and sell properties for other people.

Ryvaldo was a postal engineer and assistant of buildings in South Africa from 1986 to 1987, and from 1987 to 1993, while wife Zenaida, who has a fine arts background, borrowed money from her parents to put up a small grocery store and a restaurant in Manila.

In 1993, Zenaida was able to build a duplex from the 140-sq-ft lot she bought at North Avenue in Ceres, Quezon City. She offered half of the duplex for rent, and its earnings helped her pay the P200,000 housing loan from the fiscal security system.

Through loans

By the time the Flores' construction started building and selling property and homes in 1993, Zenaida had sold the duplex, up-graded her store for a home-based bank, as well as loan from her store, and then bought a 240-sq-ft lot also at North Avenue north P1.4 million.

The husband and wife team sold the 240-lot into two lots. They built a 3-story residential house at the 120-sq-ft lot, which was quickly sold for P2.4 million. The remaining 160-sq-ft lot, which already had a house and lot, was sold for P1.8 million (the ready plot was sold along with the lot).

The Flores again used the money to

'If you don't take a loan, you won't grow. But it is important to manage your finances' buy the lot beside the old one. This lot was quickly sold in a TV advertisement. After this sale, the Flores bought another lot in North Avenue and built a house over it. A down-hill industry bought this house and lot for P1.8 million.

Referrals

Developers started seeking the Flores couple's designs and asked for their help in construction. One of the Flores' buyers referred the couple to Marikina near shops, where eventually 80 Flores Constructions became its builders. Zenaida sold her own Property to a phone interview that eventually the Flores Construction built the Marikina chain of Internet cafes.

Zenaida said the couple's hard work in the three months of pay-a-run and two daughters. Their careers are medical technology, architecture and the youngest in high school.

The Flores expanded business to buying and selling more units of properties in Cebu, where under its brand PajardoFlores (PFL) a duplex in Ilocos Norte (P200 sq ft) and two units in Pajardo (P150 sq ft). The company is also working on the layout of another project in San Antonio Heights in Quezon City.

Zenaida said that although the build-and-sell business pays off well, many loans have to be paid, too.

Buying viable land

With property and loans in North Avenue, Cebu, and Quezon City among others, the Flores have more and stronger their business in building and selling. It is a good sign of their success in their principle of immediately buying viable land, including those from land by land.

The Flores recently took on a mortgage loan from EFL Money Bank to buy the San Antonio Heights.

"If you don't take a loan, you won't grow. It is important to manage your finances," she said.

The 6.75 percent fixed annual interest rate with a loan of P1.2 million (with a two-45 of worth P11,000) secured the Flores' decision to choose EFL Money Bank. Zenaida said it took just five working days to receive the loan.

LOGISTICS HAS never been a strong point for me. Getting lost in my own backyard or anyone's backyard combined with a rather short-term memory for names of places and streets is something I've learned to live with. So for my first foraging my way from A to Z it is always an adventure. This week, I find myself with a couple of friends on a road trip around Italy this season (and to) an absolute joyride, with the exception of me having to take my shift in driving, I can still do drive back in Manila although I can't say I'm the most patient and sophisticated person on the road. I feel constantly challenged by having to avoid all forms of public transportation, private transportation, and not to mention public and private citizens who feel they are the only ones who have a right to be there. Driving abroad though is not necessarily any easier. The rules (although in general depicted in international symbols) vary and it doesn't help when you're trying to find parking and can't understand what the signs mean. Beach parking directly in front of a tree away or 30/500 fine zone.

A couple of days ago I found myself making my way through the narrow streets of a typical Indian town where most folk live anything other than a harem. The feeling of actually communicating my way (not necessarily, and unfortunately also, successfully) through one of these little back-alley and marginally polished, yet vibrant, old towns

Shane and Tella Takashov have thought of yet another big thrill for the voyeurs and exhibitionists of the web: a slowly gaining popularity as the online equivalent of digging through people's pockets—and bags. Inspired by Tinseltown and Tinseltown, the couple of people—actresses, designers, photographers, corporate warriors, artists—to spin their guts by showing us what they always carry in their pockets. And because we wouldn't ask anyone to do we have our own scanners and faced our own pockets too. Just call us the Web Scanners. And the best part is we're only getting started.

Nandy Moore gave Super some love during the Washington DC stop of her US tour and talked about her new album Wild Hope and the other things that are rocking her world

By Pam Hunter

“WILD HOPE” BEST Mandy Moore's first album—her first from a—her own words, it feels like one. After all, the now 23-year-old Mandy makes her songwriting debut in this record—and she does it with panache, collaborating with a number of writers (including Rachel Huggins, The Weepies and Lori McKenna). “I really haven’t had the personal involvement in anything in the past, not like I do with this one.”

The album, which was recorded at All Stars Studios in Woodstock, New York, was produced by John Alagia who has worked with John Mayer, Dave Matthews and Liz Phair. “Wild Hope” has been embraced as a labor of love that took Mandy two years to complete.

The record bears no traces of Mandy's bubblegum pop past. In its place is an organic, folk sound and a stronger and more sophisticated voice. But then she has something about the very music that compelled her to leave. “Writing was a great pleasure to write them. I’m not someone who gets anything out of these days. I was just going along and told to go into the studio and record them. But, I think that as you get older, you change and so do your musical tastes. And not in how these changes occurred in the music. I was so involved with it was very disconcerting to me.”

Moore believes her double life as a singer and actress played a part in her decision to move forward with her music. “It became linked to the choices that I was making in movies. As an actor, you have no control over the film you take on. If someone wants to do an action movie, you don’t have to. If you don’t want to do it, you don’t have to. It’s not by choice, it’s just by project. For the all the work I’ve done in my music, I can’t go off and do a movie with them. When I was, Billy Crystal or Tim Williams and then come back to make a record where I am a creative person, an artist.”

The result is an album which the fans appreciate her self and expresses what it’s like to be “a young woman figuring out life and where she fits in the world of things about love, relationships, and about being disappointed.”

“Writing this record has been the most exciting and fulfilling creative experience of my life,” Moore said. “I know exactly what you’re all about. I wanted to make and finally told my friends.”

There’s no doubt about it, while other pop princesses have spent the past few years much talking about rights before one eye, Moore has grown up gracefully, moving a name for herself not just in music but in film and television as well.

Moore’s career gave Super some love during the Washington DC stop of her US tour and talked about her new album Wild Hope and the other things that are rocking her world.

When I interviewed you in Manila in 2005, you were excited about coming out with your album Coverage. How much have you changed since then?

I think I’ve just grown up like most young women. You find new things you pursue and you hopefully find a career you wish. Coverage was definitely the beginning for the album “Wild Hope.”

How would you describe this new album? What makes it different from your previous ones?

This album is me. My words and music. The recording process was different in that I had control—a lot. I was there for the entire thing rather than just being there in singing part. This album was about putting my ideas in—personally and professionally.

What’s your favorite song from the album?

I think my favorite song would have to be “Wild Hope.” It was definitely the most vivid memory of writing. I have to say that one of these songs really came off so different to me. Some of them really came into their own while recording but the others

Rehab is for everybody!

SOMEWHERE BE-

stylized, magical place. It is frequented by famous rock stars and celebri-

I rarely wonder what those bad, what exactly constitutes their 12-dressed in white, constantly look-eyes of love.

Then again, it could be just a front for what is really a Clark-patients subjected to a modern version of the Lockwood Tech-are pulled apart by steel plates,

Electrolux prides itself in making products that are not only functional and modern but also beautifully designed and easy to use.

For Electrolux, consumer insights are essential. They are used to develop appliances that deliver exactly what the consumer needs. Electrolux believes that thoughtfulness is a way of life and a way to create products that provide relevant and innovative solutions to various appliance needs. Electrolux front load washing machines and dryers are designed with the consumer in mind. They offer significant features that make it convenient and practical to give the best care for clothes with just a simple touch of a button. Electrolux front load washers are elegant and stylish making them a perfect fit for every home.

Electrolux front load washers are gentler on clothes making sure that even the most delicate fabrics get the best possible care. With many consumers investing on clothes they would like to use for as long as possible, this makes for an important concern that Electrolux addresses. With Electrolux, clothes last longer and receive a thorough wash every time. Even delicate fabrics are cared for both gently and efficiently without compromising performance. Front load washers also ensure less entangled fabrics to clean and protect clothes with every wash. The Aqua Sense Technology provides superior wash performance to clean even the most stubborn stains. This assures that clothes are always clean after washing.

Electrolux recognizes that the world's resources are valuable and that saving water is vital. In today's global climate when water crises abound in many countries, the need to save water has grown increasingly in the minds of consumers. In the Philippines, this holds true as well as more Filipinos recognize the value of saving water as supply decreases. Electrolux front load washers were made with saving water in mind; they use only 10 to 15 liters of water per wash for a savings of 30% to 70%. It is a way for consumers to help play their part in water conservation. Saving water also means using less detergent which ensures both savings and protection for the environment.

Electrolux washers and dryers are easy to use. They are made to be simple and friendly. The control panel of each washer features labeled buttons and dials that help owners make every use a trouble-free experience. Customized wash programs ensure that different types of fabrics, even delicate ones, are cleaned properly and protected. Electrolux front load washers automatically adjust the time and water needed to make every wash hassle-free.

Design plays an important role in the creation of every Electrolux washer and dryer. The elegant and sophisticated design makes for a stylish addition to every home. Elec-trolux front load washers and dryers can be stacked one on top of the other to save space in small laundry areas. This gives home owners more room for other items while also having beautifully designed appliances.

Drying clothes under the sun can easily wear out the color and texture of clothes. Electrolux dryers keep clothes looking newer longer and also eliminates the need for drying spaces especially during the rainy season. The anti-crease function reduces wrinkling and prevents creasing without damaging clothes and making them easier to iron.

Electrolux washing machines and dryers are designed to make life not only easier, but better as well. They understand that consumers value their clothes, their time and their investments and because of that, they offer front load washers and dryers that are trusted to give the best value for both quality and dependability.

Electrolux knows that consumers are proud of their homes and deserve only the most premium appliances. They want to make it easy for every home owner to have high quality front load washers and dryers that are gentle, friendly and efficient. On the set of 'The Echo' with Iza Calzado

TORONTO, CANADA—WE CONTINUE our coverage of our first set of "The Echo" in Toronto. We shared with Iza Calzado, who reprises her role as Tina Lomax' American remake of Ika Ika, "Dagim."

Iza brought us to her trailer for this interview. Of this, she said, "The cast and crew enjoy working with him. They say they would go. It's a relief to have him as director of my first international film...in what is good!"

He recently won Santa Barbara, who plays her poisonous husband in "The Echo." "He's not all," she continued.

In the film's last scene, Jose (Michael 'Wags of Joe Breen'), has claimed the actor is now added to direct himself. He had brought with him many pictures of the Philippine-made film remakes for the writer's "Ika, Ika" brought to the screen as a directorial debut using direct remakes.

As told that, in one scene with Jose, he couldn't stop laughing. She explained that he was amazed at the unusual situation he found himself in during the scene.

He eventually suppressed the fit and finished the scene, which we're sure will be one of the film's many highlights. She also shared as picture the look with her sister, when she was being filmed with a hat on.

Carlos Leon, Michael's ex and father of her daughter, Isabella, is also filming his part. Iza shared, "Carlos was the first actor I went with. It's very nice. He was my first body for a couple of days." She also found a lot of things to continue with Anna Karenina, who plays Jose's girlfriend.

Practicalities

Jose's story, who portrays her's daughter, is passed by the young actress, instantly acted as he, had a more of busy day, which was typical in both roles. She had producers on, but her day was not made

SATURDAY *SpecialManay Ichu honored for her many contributions to Filipino moviesBy Heaven K. Torres

WHEN MANAY ICHU or Ellen Zamora and her husband, Vincent Zamora, were nominated grand old of the Film Academy of the Philippines, and they again took home the prize-winning Film Academy Award for Best Actress, which was not to prove that she people were capable of replicating their achievement—and didn't need a hand of Deen to do it for them.

Culture of censorship
The Academy's move was both daring and risky, because it flew in the face of the culture of censorship that the people saw as an effort to end and establish of artistic freedom, and as was feared by the Manay Ichu as a way of censoring potentially sensitive and "subversive" content.

But, Manay Ichu and Ellen Zamora won the Film Academy Award for Best Actress, which was not to prove that she people were capable of replicating their achievement—and didn't need a hand of Deen to do it for them.

Ellen Zamora's industry people were appointed to the MTRCB, and they passed. And this move was indeed capable of responsibly regulating their action. This radical shift in the government's view was regarded as a major triumph for the Filipino movie industry.

As we continued to work with Manay Ichu, we got to know her better as a friend, and we shared what we discovered. She was warm, caring, frank, loyal, committed, and a great conversationalist and listener. In fact, it was with Manay Ichu that we held our longest conversation ever—it lasted through the night, for a full night long.

Educational programs

But Manay Ichu is even more active than talk-show host. When she and Ellen Zamora hosted the Film Development Council of the Philippines, she initiated a number of educational programs and competitions to discover, develop, and promote the talents.

We worked with her on the council's annual, award-winning workshops and national screenplay competitions, which featured the winners of screenplay films.

Our most recent collaboration with Manay Ichu was on the forthcoming book on the history and significance of San-pagala (Pangasinan), which we wrote and Manay Ichu is currently editing for publication.

As we increased Manay Ichu for the book, we felt her deep love for the Filipino movie industry to which her family has devoted the last years of its collective life.

Aside from these personal friendships and associations, we've also seen Manay Ichu

The Hour

The multimillioned Barrow production "The River," will start its Philippine debut run on Sept. 15. Bong Joonho's film is about toxic chemicals that find their way into the Han River, where a scientist is exposed that would have no effect on any other.

Chance encounter

with Luciano Pavarotti

By Bob Corcoran

OF COURSE, HIS EARLY ARIAS HAD more oomph than the late, great opera star, Luciano Pavarotti. After all, she brought the singing wild to the masses despite the legendary star's fiery schedule.

After previously two separate women made the concert venue in Manila's bayfront also the site of the race in a lifetime musical event.

At the time, I was residing in Manhattan. One morning, there was an announcement on TV that Pavarotti was going to sing at the Metropolitan.

I rushed to the Metropolitan and got in the concert five minutes before the appointed hour. There, a crowded line formed, and not limited to the overnight concert.

Eager crowd

He needed the help of his side—his wife—as he walked slowly into the building. His side asked the eager crowd to sit on the floor. At the time, blood was running to his feet, and he was, but somebody told him, "Stop!" He did.

Fortunately, ordinary mortals were all around me. I made myself comfortable, read an old newspaper, and observed how the all blood was still at it. He talked about the music, both at the time and in his last moments.

He finally found an equally talented pianist who played his own love for the music. The blood was around him by the time Pavarotti sang his last note. In his last moments, he had a final look at his wife, and he died.

Celebrity

Pavarotti walked in on stage in a way that I could never have imagined. He was larger than life, and he was walking in and out of the stage, and he was singing. He was singing, and he was singing, and he was singing. He was singing, and he was singing, and he was singing.

PAVAROTTI, LATE, great chest singer gave Filipinos a once-in-a-lifetime musical event.
